The innovative architectural design of Higuerón Residences is the work of renowned North American architect and University of Berkeley professor Robin Chiang. The spacious two-bedroom residences have an elongated sliding door, allowing residents to split the apartments. Large windows in the living room and bedrooms let in natural light and integrate seamlessly with the wooden interior.

The Italian kitchen features a long marble island that perfectly complements the warm design. The outdoor terrace brings Mediterranean scents, while the interior and exterior are one and the same. Each corner of the house has a unique scent chosen by the resident.

For maximum privacy, all apartments are surrounded by natural vegetation, with each enjoying its own jacuzzi with views of the Mediterranean and nature. The penthouses follow the architectural design of the solariums, with pointed hexagonal roofs providing shade in the dining area, seamlessly integrated with the surrounding trees. The private pool at the solarium offers a relaxing retreat, surrounded by fresh native vegetation.
